Vanderbilt University Medical Center has released the records of its transgender patients to the Tennessee Attorney General in response to an investigation.

VUMC said the state was investigating billing for transgender care services provided to individuals enrolled in State-sponsored insurance plans.

The Attorney General's office confirmed Tuesday it launched a probe into the medical school for potential medical billing fraud.

The state requested medical records from January 1, 2018, to the present, and VUMC started providing relevant records in December 2022.

Tennessee Attorney General Jonathan Skrmetti said he would investigate the clinic's practices following allegations of employee discrimination

The facility reportedly wrote to patients informing them of the move, in a letter seen by The Tennessean and posted to social media

Tennessee Attorney General Jonathan Skrmetti and Governor Bill Lee said they would investigate the clinic's practices in response to the allegations.

The facility reportedly wrote to patients informing them of the move, in a letter seen by The Tennessean and posted to social media.

The clinic told patients that their records were handed over on the 'assurance that the records would remain confidential as required by Tennessee law.'

'The Attorney General's Office is not permitted by law to disclose these medical records or make public use of them except in the discharge of its duties or in legal proceedings involving the state,' they added.

Jeffrey R. Balsler CEO of the VUMC that is under investigation for its medical billing practices

Smith added: 'The Office does not publicize fraud investigations to preserve the integrity of the investigative process. The Office maintains patient records in the strictest confidence, as required by law.

'The investigation is focused solely on VUMC and certain related providers, not patients, as VUMC is well aware.'

Chris Sanders, executive director of the Tennessee Equality Project, an LGBTQ advocacy organization, told The Tennessean that three different parents of transgender children called him in a panic after they were told by Vanderbilt that their child's medical records were released to the attorney general, with no further information.

'They're terrified,' he said. 'They don't know what's next, they don't know how this will be used or whether they will be targeted in some way. They feel like their privacy has been violated.'

The issue of transgender rights has become increasingly fraught in Tennessee, where there is a Republican supermajority, in recent months.

A recently passed law bans any treatments or procedures prescribed to treat children with gender dysphoria, including puberty blockers.

The law is currently being challenged in a federal lawsuit and a judge is weighing whether to grant a preliminary injunction ahead of trial.
