

ADVERTISEMENT

-22%

-28%

NEWS / THE BUZZ ON FLORIDA POLITICS

Florida veered from norms to strip transgender care from Medicaid, records show

At least two state employees involved with a controversial report received raises well above their peers.

Kaleb Hobson-Garcia, a transgender man, drove from Tallahassee to speak during a news conference at the Marriott Fort Lauderdale Airport as the Florida Board of Medicine met inside. On the agenda were proposed rules by the DeSantis administration to ban doctors from performing gender-confirming treatments and providing puberty blockers to kids diagnosed with gender dysphoria. [JOSE A. IGLESIAS | EYE

By Emily L. Mahoney Times staff
Romy Ellenbogen Times staff

Published Aug. 2 | Updated Yesterday

SUBSCRIBE

The resulting report and state rule revoked Medicaid coverage of treatments for gender dysphoria, like puberty blockers and hormone therapy. It was thrown out by a federal judge, who in his June order called the rule an “exercise in politics, not good medicine.”

Hundreds of pages of state employee testimony and internal agency records gathered as part of the federal case show how closely the state coordinated with consultants who have taken stances counter to major medical organizations on how to treat gender dysphoria. Those consultants were paid tens of thousands of dollars by the state. One grew friendly enough with a top agency official that he took to calling him “mighty Jason” and “J-man” over text.

ADVERTISEMENT

for visitor

Get

Visitor
INSURANCE THAT

www.visitor

1-855-5-1-510-3

info@visi

Court testimony from state employees also reveals how an agency under Gov. Ron DeSantis veered from its own procedures to compile a report centered around a topic that has become a major plank of the governor’s presidential campaign. The state employee who was the lead author of the report testified that the process began with a request from the governor’s office. He also testified that he had not seen another instance of the state using this type of report to reevaluate treatments already covered by Medicaid.

After the Medicaid report was completed, at least two Agency for Health Care Administration employees involved with it received raises well above the norm for their peers, state data shows.

“It seemed like a very politically motivated effort to exclude a group of people from coverage,” said Jeff English, a former agency staffer.

genesi...

SPONSORED CONTENT

Sponsored Video by genesis.com ↗

By genesis.com

Learn More

0:00 / 0:30

his supervisor knew that English perceived this report as “a conclusion in search of an argument.”

“I took pride in producing fair, accurate, well-researched reports,” English told the Tampa Bay Times. “And that was not one of those.”

ADVERTISEMENT

In response to emailed questions, Bailey Smith, a spokesperson for the agency, denied that it deviated from normal process when producing the report, including the selection of staffers to complete it.

“No one person has been solely responsible for all reports at the agency,” she said. “The fact is that the use of puberty blockers and cross-sex hormones has increased by more than 63% since 2017, in part because the US is decades behind other developed nations on guidance for supposed ‘gender-affirming care.’”

English said the way the state undermined its own processes in producing this report hurt morale within the agency, which, along with other segments of Florida’s state government, has seen high turnover in recent years.

Get insights into Florida politics

“When process and procedure start falling by the wayside, that contributes to low morale because people (begin) ... questioning the way things are being done,” English said.

Consultants were “part of the team”

In the June ruling, U.S. District Judge Robert Hinkle wrote that the report was, “from the outset, a biased effort to justify a predetermined outcome, not a fair analysis of the evidence.” Hinkle is a judge in the Northern District of Florida and was appointed by former President Bill Clinton. He’s the same judge who declared that DeSantis was wrong to remove Hillsborough State Attorney Andrew Warren but that he couldn’t give him his job back because he lacked jurisdiction.

ADVERTISEMENT

In the Medicaid case, Hinkle cited other inconsistencies in the state agency’s process. Officials typically only prepared this type of report when considering a new treatment for Medicaid coverage, “but here, apparently for the first time ever,” the agency prepared a report on already-approved treatments, Hinkle wrote. And they brought in experts, he noted, who were “known in advance for their staunch opposition to gender-affirming care.”

The state has appealed Hinkle’s ruling. In his deposition, the report’s lead author, Matt Brackett, said the agency relied on consultants because they were expecting litigation and needed as “robust a report as possible.”

The state contracted with seven consultants for up to about $322,000, records show, and has disbursed at least $93,000.

Romina Brignardello-Petersen, a Canadian researcher, has collected $34,800, according to a state payment database, making her the highest-paid consultant so far. Brignardello-Petersen previously did work for the Society for Evidence Based Gender Medicine. A group of scientists from Yale University, in a public response critiquing Florida’s report, called that society an “activist group that opposes standard medical care for gender dysphoria.”

At least $15,900 was paid to Andre Van Mol, a California physician and member of the conservative American College of Pediatricians, an organization designed as an alternative to the mainstream American Academy of Pediatrics. The group’s beliefs include that kids are worse off when raised by same-gender couples and that gay youth can “return” to being heterosexual with counseling.

The state also paid at least $12,400 to Quentin Van Meter, an Atlanta child endocrinologist who was previously the president of the conservative pediatricians group, state records show.

The consultants retained by Florida have traveled around the country speaking in courtrooms and legislatures to push back against issues surrounding transgender rights across the nation, including in Ohio, Arkansas and Alabama.

A judge in Texas previously found Van Meter to be “discredited as an expert” on hormone treatment, according to the Pennsylvania Capital-Star, a nonprofit news outlet that’s part of a national network covering state governments. (Van Meter also testified in the Pennsylvania House on the topic of transgender medical care.)

The other consultants are Miriam Grossman, a New York child psychiatrist whose website states that she “believes every child is born in the right body”; Patrick Lappert, an Alabama plastic surgeon and Catholic deacon who has said the transgender view of identity is an attack on fundamental Christian concepts; James Cantor, a Canadian psychologist and sex researcher who has written a contrary response to the American Academy of Pediatrics policy supporting medical care for gender dysphoria; and Gerard Kevin Donovan, a Georgetown bioethicist who has written that “present day denigrations” started with birth control pills.

ADVERTISEMENT

Most of the consultants did not respond to questions sent by email or declined to comment. Cantor, in an email, said he is not biased against gender-affirming care — in fact, he has supported public funding for medical transition for adults, he said.

“I have no ideological opposition to the medicalized transition of minors, but as the systematic reviews have all concluded, the evidence does not support access that many want,” he wrote.

Cantor also disagreed with the notion that the Florida report was driven by politics.

“Given the enormously polarized views on the topic, any conclusion seeming to

”As an expert in assessing and synthesizing evidence, the Florida Agency for Health Care Administration asked me, as a consultant, to provide professional assessments of the published scientific evidence using best practice methodology,” she wrote.

An agency leader also sought people to speak against medical transition and was willing to pay a consultant to find them. Jason Weida, who is now the agency’s secretary, asked a consultant to recruit Floridians who regretted gender-affirming treatment or doctors who turned against the practice, text messages show.

ADVERTISEMENT

Some of the consultants also appeared at a hearing in July 2022 about the Medicaid exclusion and pushed back when members of the public criticized the state’s report. Multiple consultants at the hearing billed taxpayers thousands for their time.

Both before and after the hearing, Van Mol and Weida appeared friendly over text, with Van Mol referring to Weida as “mighty Jason” and “J-man.”

While state employees were compiling the Medicaid report, Van Mol emailed Weida articles theorizing about the “financiers” of the “trans movement,” arguing that it was connected to pharmaceutical companies.

The two kept in touch after the Medicaid rule went into effect and as litigation over the rule continued. In November, Van Mol texted Weida to tell him that it was a “downer” not to have testified before the Board of Medicine — which prohibited medical treatment for gender dysphoria for children — but said it was “very wise of you and therefore the board to have taken my advice” to have specialists speak.

“Being part of the team pushing forward with the right cause is what counts, not polishing my ego. :),” Van Mol said in a text.

Following the release of the report, Weida presented the state employees who wrote it with an “award of excellence” at an internal agency ceremony i photos posted on LinkedIn show.

✕

ADVERTISEMENT

✕

the Times had seen both by “online stalking.” Screenshots of the text messages were included in court documents as part of the federal trial, while the LinkedIn photos were posted publicly.

Public salary data shows that at least two of the staffers involved with implementing that controversial recommendation received raises well beyond the norm.

Cole Giering, a program administrator at the agency, made $20,000 more as of June 2023 than he did with the same job title at the beginning of last year. His 33% raise in the span of 18 months is about five times the average for employees who held the same job, according to a state database analyzed by the Times.

A senior pharmacist involved in compiling the report, Nai Chen, received a raise of about $13,000 in the same period, a 13% bump. Other senior pharmacists who were not part of the report received raises just over 5%, the salary database shows.

When asked about the differences in pay, Smith said the agency “provides merit-based pay raises to retain employees.” None of the individual employees responded to emails requesting comment.

Several other staffers involved in the report, including Brackett, are not listed in the salary database, and the agency has not provided their pay information.

ADVERTISEMENT

“A major deviation”

Scott Rivkees, who led the Florida Department of Health from 2019 to 2021, said that typically the “delicate and sensitive” issue of how to treat gender dysphoria has been left to the patient, their family and their doctors.

States like Florida that are intervening mark “a major deviation from how medicine is typically practiced,” Rivkees said in an interview.

The Medicaid report isn’t the first time in DeSantis’ administration the process for providing guidance on certain health care topics appears to be influenced by political considerations. In April, the Times reported that health officials removed key data from a report on the safety of COVID that undermined their recommendation against young men getting the Brackett, the lead author of the Medicaid report, testified that it was a ‘

and hormone therapy for gender dysphoric children, under the same title.

In an email after Florida’s rule hearing, one of the consultants, Grossman, wrote that she loved how the audience cheered each time DeSantis was mentioned.

ADVERTISEMENT

ONCE-YEARLY Uninterrupted
SUPPRELIN[®] LA
(histrelin acetate) subcutaneous implant

with your doctor.

Download now

Hypothetical patient.

IMPORTANT SAFETY INFO

• SUPPRELIN[®] LA should not be taken by patients who are allergic to gonadotropin releasing hormone agonist medicines, or any ingredients of SUPPRELIN[®] LA implant, or is pregnant or breastfeeding.

Please see full Prescribing Information.

“To which state do we go next?” Grossman wrote to some of the other consultants and to Weida. “I’m ready.”

Times data editor Langston Taylor contributed to this report.

UP NEXT: DeSantis quickly tweets reaction to latest Trump indictment

Emily L. Mahoney is the senior political writer, covering politics and power in Florida. Reach her at emahoney@tampabay.com.

Romy Ellenbogen is a Tallahassee correspondent, covering state government with a focus on criminal justice and health. Reach her at rellenbogen@tampabay.com.

Questions swirl around AP, Cambridge psychology courses in Florida

Yesterday
• News

6 things to watch as Tampa Bay schools reopen on Thursday

Aug. 4
• News

ADVERTISEMENT

How Do RMDs Factor Into Retirement
SmartAsset

MD: If You Have Dark Spots, Do This Immediately (It's Genius!)
GundryMD

Here's The Average Price Of Gutter Protection For Houses Over 2500 sq ft
LeafFilter Partner

Trump is still DeSantis' main rival. But watch out for Tim Scott.

2 hours ago
• Elections

What has nearly $34 million bought a pro-DeSantis super PAC?

Yesterday
• The Buzz on Florida Politics

Tampa Mayor Castor emboldened by transportation tax vote results?

Yesterday
• Tampa

Pharmacists at Tampa veterans hospital complain of understaffing and burnout

Yesterday
• Health

Grand jury investigating bid-rigging involving DeSantis' education department

Yesterday
• The Buzz on Florida Politics

NBA Players Association calls Orlando Magic donation to DeSantis 'alarming'

Yesterday
• News

• Florida

Email bashing Castor's Tampa tax hike lists Janet Cruz mailing address

Aug. 4

• Tampa

ADVERTISEMENT

ADVERTISEMENT

ADVERTISEMENT

ONCE-YEARLY Uninterrupted
SUPPRELIN[®]LA
(histrelin acetate) subcutaneous implant

to help make an informed decision.

Order now

IMPORTANT SAFETY INFO

for 7 days. You and your child should rc insertion site until the cut is healed. Afte healed, your child can go back to his or activities. The doctor will give you comp

Please see full Prescribing Inf

Help chat >

Subscribe

Newsletters

My Account

CONTACT US

ABOUT US

SUBMIT A NEWS TIP

JOIN US

MEDIA KIT

PLACE AN AD

LEGAL DISCLAIMERS

PUBLIC NOTICES

SHOP

